

COMMUNITY

For hundreds of years, people have congregated along the banks of the Wind and Popo Agie Rivers to take advantage of the area's benign climate and abundant wildlife. Traces of these past cultures can be seen in the petroglyphs and pictographs that are etched or painted on the sandstone cliffs outside of Lander.

Today, many people are drawn to Lander because they want to climb, fish or live near the mountains. They stay because they find a community. The Lander community values hard work, innovation and a willingness to take risks, the "can-do" attitude is what Lander is all about.

Lander's history provides a rich backdrop for the community's vibrant culture. Local museums capture the essence of the past, while community-driven efforts seek to create a living culture today. Music, art, theatre, even alternative activities such as yoga, thrive in Lander.

Lander also offers an interesting mix of dining and entertainment. The diverse citizenry has also nourished the city's cultural opportunities. The nearby Wind River Indian Reservation provides another valuable contribution to the city's diverse culture. The city's cultural assets are considered a vital component in Lander's ability to market itself as a great place to do business. Lander is where the "Old West" meets the "New West", the right time and the right place to do business!
